Welcome to the 77th Annual Meeting of the Southern Sociological Society

PRESIDENT'S WELCOME MESSAGE

Leslie H. Hossfeld
SSS President
2013-2014

About the Cover:

On Easter Sunday, April 9th, 1939 seventy-five thousand people attended the outdoor concert of world-renowned opera singer, Marian Anderson at the Lincoln Memorial. Anderson was originally scheduled to perform at Constitution Hall in Washington, DC, owned by the Daughters of the American Revolution, but was denied access based on her race. An outpouring of support for Anderson and outrage towards the DAR was demonstrated by the attendance at the memorial, and the radio coverage and record number of listeners who tuned in across the nation for the concert. Mitchell Jamieson attended the event and painted this WPA mural for the Department of the Interior in Washington DC, 1939, where the mural hangs today.

In Charlotte, on the 79th year of our society, we will revisit some of the very issues that the founders of SSS struggled with in the South: poverty, social policy and the role of the sociologist. In an era not that different from the early years of SSS, we are experiencing some of the highest poverty rates in our history and a profound intensification in economic, social and political inequality. What is our role as sociologists in addressing this issue? We have a long, solid tradition of excellent poverty scholarship: we have shifted our gaze from cultural explanations to structural explanations, and recently brought culture back in. We have examined the fallout of bad poverty policy, examined the lived experiences of poverty, social isolation, social exclusion, diminishing opportunity structure, and limited human, cultural and social capitals. Yet there still remains an arena that as sociologists we are particularly weak, and this relates to policy and praxis. Our conference program focuses on two interrelated areas: the first, and perhaps the greatest, is the unresolved problem with the poverty measurement itself. Look for an excellent plenary panel of social scientists at the forefront of recasting and reshaping poverty measurement. The second is on praxis and the role of sociology in shaping and advancing policy and economic development projects to alleviate poverty in the South. As someone who works on the ground, at the local level, it is becoming increasingly clear that targeting state and local policy and working with state and local governments is vital. We will hear from sociologists who are tackling these issues. Look for a great workshop by ASA staff that provides hands-on instructions on writing for policy makers. Lastly, who are the sociologists working on anti-poverty projects and policy in the south and what can we learn from their experiences? The founders of SSS exemplified this kind of scholarly engagement as they worked to address Southern poverty. Look for these sessions that highlight and celebrate this tradition and the work that is currently being done in the South.

Look, too, for the carrot icon throughout the program! We have an incredible mini-conference on food that should not be missed, including sessions on urban and rural agriculture, access to food and food insecurity, and economic development through local food movements. This mini-conference pulls together critical, interrelated themes on poverty and food justice.

Southern Sociologists gathered for the first time in 1936 in Atlanta to address the pressing issues in the South. Their program focused on southern poverty, policy and their role as social scientists. We have an excellent program that focuses on these very issues put together by a dedicated Program Committee Chair, Daniel Buffington (UNCW) and an excellent group of sociologists on the Program Committee, and of course, committed SSS members like you. There is so much labor and love in our society; I am constantly astounded and in awe of the spirit of this organization. We have an Executive Office that works tirelessly on keeping SSS running (David Brunsmas, EO and Slade Lellock Assistant to the EO – both at Virginia Tech), a Local Arrangements Committee that has worked hard to ensure you enjoy the Queen City of Charlotte (Lisa Walker UNCC) and an Executive Committee that gives easily of their time to support the work of our organization. Enjoy the incredible program we have crafted this year! Thank you SSS members for all you do for our society!

Graduate Study in Sociology

A program that provides real opportunities before and after graduation:

- ❖ Work with award-winning professors and scholars in diverse areas of expertise using multiple methodological approaches.
- ❖ Well over half of full-time students receive departmental or university funding, and MTSU is among the top fifty schools in the nation recognized as a “Best Buy” in higher education.
- ❖ Low student to faculty ratio ensures close working relationships in seminars, independent study, and in carrying out thesis research.
- ❖ Choose specialized training from a number of concentration areas; recent student research focuses on a wide range of topics.
- ❖ Opportunities for conference attendance and participation, publication, and funding to support research and travel.
- ❖ Our graduates consistently place in both academic and applied settings.

Our university offers an MA degree program for students intending to pursue doctoral studies or employment in applied settings. Students on the academic track are rigorously prepared for doctoral programs and have a high rate of acceptance at such programs. Students on the applied track have gone on to direct state agencies and multi-million dollar federal programs; serve as federal, state, and local investigators, researchers, and consultants; and coordinate a variety of social programs.

- ✓ Check our program website for graduate testimonials, placement information, recent thesis topics, and more.

More than 60 percent of NSF-funded social science studies, for example, claim their research will be of use in the policy process. Yet many researchers have relatively simplistic views of how research findings reach the policy process and how the findings get used. A major purpose of this workshop is discuss how to write a policy brief, but we will put this method for bringing research work into the policy process in a broader context, suggesting when a variety of other formats (e.g., amicus briefs, testimony, informal meetings) might also be effective. We will provide examples of policy-oriented research documents, and examine effective presentation formats. We will discuss different ways research is used in the policy process depending on the audiences and the purposes, elaborating on how communications strategies, personal/professional relationships, networks, and policy-oriented activities and strategies effect the utilization of research. Workshop participants will be asked to think about what research is amenable to policy writing, who the policy audiences might be for such research, what formats might best capture the attention of diverse audiences, what impact can be expected and who, as social scientists, they can develop relationships to facilitate getting their research into the policy process. Finally, we will collectively think about how sociology associations can promote the legitimacy of this work as professional work.	Elizabeth

ROMANTIC RELATIONSHIPS EVER CONDUCTED:

WHAT CONSTITUTES “NORMAL” BEHAVIOR AMONG HAPPY COUPLES—
AND WHAT IT MAY MEAN FOR YOUR LOVE LIFE
THE NORMAL BAR

The Surprising Secrets of Happy Couples and What They Reveal About Creating a New Normal in Your Relationship

By Chrisanna Northrup, Pepper Schwartz, PhD and James Witte, PhD
(Harmony Books; Paperback; January 7, 2014), Now available in paperback

Chrisanna Northrup teamed with sociologists, Yale Ph.D. Pepper Schwartz and Harvard PhD James Witte, to answer a question about which we’re all intensely curious: What is “normal” when it comes to relationships between romantic partners? If we could steal a look into the lives of those who declare themselves happy, what would their sex lives look like? How do these relationship “winners” sustain that feeling of being in love decade after decade?

Armed with these questions (and nearly 1,300 more!) and a powerful interactive survey tool known as OnQ, THE NORMAL BAR’s trio of author experts was able to execute the most extensive survey of romantic relationships ever conducted, polling nearly 100,000 respondents around the world. By comparison, the Masters and Johnson and Shere Hite surveys each collected data from only a few thousand.

“This outstanding book draws on thousands of surveys to find out what makes couples happy. Besides being entertaining and edifying, The Normal Bar can actually help most couples improve their relationships.”

--Barbara Reskin, Past President of the American Sociological Association

"Masters and Johnson, it's time to move over. The Normal Bar mixes together sex, savvy insights and science, making you laugh while you learn. Bet you haven't done that in a while."

--Nancy L. Snyderman, MD, NBC News Chief Medical Editor

"These essays are both timed and timeless. Timed because they are products of a man and his era. They are his thoughts, shaped by what was happening to him when he wrote them. Timeless because they offer a historical perspective on the region and its people. This is a fine book."

Ph.D. in Public Policy

The Ph.D. in Public Policy at UNC Charlotte is an interdisciplinary program focusing on the development, implementation, and evaluation of policy solutions to public problems. It stresses the development of applied analytic tool skills, advanced cognitive abilities, and topical specialties allowing students to tailor the program to the policy field of their career interest.

Graduates advance in careers that contribute to society through the application of their training. Career options include policy analysis, program evaluation, policy development, decision-making and academia in the public, private, and nonprofit sectors at the local, state, national, and international levels.

THE CURRICULUM

The Ph.D. in Public Policy program is structured into three distinct phases: core courses, policy field courses, and the dissertation. In all, the program requires a minimum of 63 hours of graduate credit for completion of the degree. Full-time students could normally complete the program within four (4) years. Three core principles drive the program:

- Interdisciplinary Perspective: Effective policy analysis and policy formation is not informed by any single discipline. Rather, it requires an understanding of the historical, cultural, political, social, institutional, geographic and economic aspects that frame each policy arena.
- Applied and Empirical Policy Analysis: Public policy is an inherently applied endeavor that seeks practical solutions and cogent analysis. While all research and analysis is informed by theory, the purpose of policy research is to elevate public discourse and improve public decision-making.
- Place-Based Research: To exercise applied policy analysis in an interdisciplinary context, policy research must be place-based. Valid policy analysis, based on real data, applied to actual policy settings is one of the main strengths of the program. Students work with professors in numerous capacities to develop the practical skills underpinning place-based research.

THE FACULTY

The Ph.D. in Public Policy relies on the expertise of than 50 full-time faculty drawn from eight (8) departments in three (3) colleges: Arts and Sciences, Business, and Health and Human Services. Such variety of expertise provides students in the program with a rich array of mentor support to tailor the program to their individual research and career interests. The faculty that participate in the program are some of the most prolific researchers at the university and well-regarded scholars nationally. The web site includes the full listing of program faculty.

"An important part of any sociologist's library, Fitzgerald's text does not merely describe the racial order, but invites the reader to understand the salience of race and racism in our daily lives." —Matthew W. Hughey, University of Connecticut

"Accessible and engaging—a wonderful resource for teaching about race in the US!" —Ashley ("Woody") Doane, University of Hartford

» Topical organization: Issues are discussed across racial and ethnic categories, helping students recognize race as a socially, politically, and historically constructed concept and avoiding the reification of race that can result from a group-by-group format.

» Focus on white privilege: Addresses the concept of privilege—the flipside of discrimination and inequality—with nuanced care to foster thoughtful discussion without laying blame.

» Sociohistorical context: Covers the history of US race relations through a distinctly sociological lens, sets contemporary issues in much-needed context, and shows change over time.

Stalled Revolutions?

Gender Inequality in the 21st Century

Message from the 2015 Organizers

While women have made many strides toward equal participation in American institutions, and men have become more active in family life, there is no denying that the United States is not a gender egalitarian society. Not only do women and men continue to face different expectations for their behavior in both the public and private spheres, the intersections of race/ethnicity, class, sexuality, and nativity with gender yield even more challenges to realizing equality. The 2015 SSS meeting will explore the concept of stalled gender revolutions in and across important societal institutions and contexts and discuss the policies needed to bring about a more gender egalitarian society in the 21st century.
